1. The first part of the question asks you to identify the three main components of a coaching session. The three main components are: the pre-session, the session itself, and the post-session. The pre-session is the time before the session when you meet with the client to discuss their goals and needs. The session is the time when you work with the client to achieve their goals. The post-session is the time after the session when you evaluate the client's progress and provide feedback.

2. The second part of the question asks you to identify the three main components of a coaching session. The three main components are: the pre-session, the session itself, and the post-session. The pre-session is the time before the session when you meet with the client to discuss their goals and needs. The session is the time when you work with the client to achieve their goals. ## Exam Answers

1. The first step in the coaching process is to establish a rapport with the athlete. This is done by listening to the athlete's concerns and providing support and encouragement. The second step is to assess the athlete's current level of skill and knowledge. This is done by observing the athlete's performance and asking questions. The third step is to set goals for the athlete. These goals should be specific, measurable, achievable, relevant, and time-bound. The fourth step is to develop a coaching plan. This plan should outline the activities and drills that will be used to help the athlete achieve their goals. The fifth step is to implement the coaching plan. This involves providing instruction, feedback, and encouragement to the athlete. The sixth step is to evaluate the athlete's progress. This is done by observing the athlete's performance and asking questions. The seventh step is to adjust the coaching plan as needed. This may involve changing the activities and drills or providing additional support and encouragement. The eighth step is to conclude the coaching session. This involves summarizing the key points of the session and providing feedback to the athlete.
